More info : Artie and Jim Mitchell Screenplay: Artie Mitchell Photography and editing: John Fontana Music: Daniel Le Blanc USA, 1972 - - Duration: 72' Starring: Marin Chambers, Johnny Keys, George S. McDonald, Elizabeth Knowles, Jank Levine, Tony Attell, Ben Davidson (USA); December 17, 1972 Dream. Plot: the girl was kidnapped and began to enjoy sex. Freed, the experience allows her to establish a more mature relationship with her partner. The entrance to the theatre of pleasure (a kind of huge orgy) passes through the green door, hence the name. The main character then takes the scene and starts (cage, scene with black ations,...), while around it in the stall there are bodies of all kinds (beautiful, ugly, fat, straight, gay,...) The result is paradoxical, hyperrealistic and paroxysmic, at the same time it is a fascinating and hypnotic film. Basically no dialogue. The two hippies give their own interpretation of the sexual revolution of the 70s, perhaps in a somewhat masculine way. The visual impact is extraordinary. Note that the main character was known nationally for advertising children's goods! V.C. Marilyn Chambers, Onstage film Behind the Green Door. The film, one of the first to be widely distributed in cinemas, is now considered a vintage hardcore classic. This is the first regular film in the United States. It is also the first feature film directed by the Mitchell brothers, famously a pair of tough directors and producers, and the debut film by Marilyn Chambers. The theme of this story is an adaptation of the story of an anonymous person who has been circulating in the environment for several years. The title of the original film in the language, Behind the Green Door, is a reference to the 1956 play Green Door, written by Bob Davis and Marvin Moore, which at that time was a rather successful hit. The plot of the story begins inside the restaurant bar, where the chef asks two truckers to tell him the green door story. In the memoirs we see a young and beautiful Gloria (Marilyn Chambers), who is kidnapped and kidnapped in a red-light club, where she is put on stage and forced to copulate with several partners in front of an audience that watches her. Gloria at first seems recalcitrant, but then begins to let go and feel pleasure. The first man to meet her is an influential black man (boxer Johnny Keys) who soon owns it. (This scene likely makes Behind the Green Door the first American film that features unsympathetic interracial sex scenes). After that, Gloria had sex with several other men. The audience, watching the stage, begin to get excited, and the audience begins to copy each other together. The final scene of ejaculation on Gloria's face is filmed in slow motion and with an abundance of psychedelic lights, and has an abnormal duration of almost seven minutes. Impact Along with Deep Throat, released in the same year, the film began the Golden Age of, the golden age of hard movies. Filmed with a budget of $60,000, the film has collected more 1 million dollars for the first week, and it came in a total of about 25 million total revenue. The film was one of the most notable commercial successes of the 1970s, along with Deep Throat and Miss Jones, and was also shown at the Cannes Film Festival. Marilyn Chambers same theme in detail: Marilyn Chambers. The cameras were still relatively unknown at the time; however, the film made her a star. Just before the film's release, it was sponsored in various advertisements, such as the liquid soap Procter and Gamble Ivory, recently emerged as a model holding a child for the Ivory Snow detergent. The product was sold under the motto clean 99 and 44/100%. The Mitchell brothers saw this as a great opportunity to advertise themselves and distributed leaflets for a film in which Chambers was described as unclean at 99 and 44/100%. After the film's release, the advertising industry was shocked, and PG recalled all Ivory Snow products and promotional materials that included Chambers' image, contributing to the hype surrounding the film. Later Procter and Gamble did not trust all their advertising agencies, using any model to advertise their products. Marilyn Chambers' image became so popular thanks to the Ivory scandal that it helped sell tickets for Beyond the Green Door and led to several jokes and lookalikes on American television talk shows of the time. Critics have since debated whether Chambers had orgasms during her sex scenes or whether she only imitated. Criticism of the film received positive reviews from unfeasible magazines and the media in general. According to critic Peter Michelson, there is a small group of films, such as Deep Throat, The Devil in Miss Jones, and Behind the Green Door, which have a minimal but sufficient artistic interest that sets them apart from everyone else. Beyond the Green Door was the second film to be inducted into the XRCO Hall of Fame, after Deep Throat. References in popular culture Images taken from Behind the Green Door (none of which shows sex scenes or nudity) are shown in America's Craziest Race, in a scene where Jackie Chan's character sees the film inside his super-unseated car, and eventually leads to an accident. The 2000 film starring Charlie Sheen and Emilio Estevez with X rating: The True Story of the Kings of American, which is based on the story of the Jaimes brothers with Artie Mitchell, shows the staging, the first and distribution of Beyond the Green Door. Mentioned in the television series California (episode 3.07). In the song Hooks in You Maiden, presente un riferimento al film nelle prime strofe del testo. Shakin' Stevens ebbe il suo primo numero 1 in classifica grazie al brano Green Door, interpret anche da Frankie Vaughan. Nella comedy maud, il film viene menzionato nell'episodio della tormented stagione nostalgia party, come pellicola molto popolare all'epoca.
